PREFACE

This study is the revised version of my doctoral thesis under the supervision of Dr P. Maurice Casey at the University of Nottingham, 1983–9. It was undertaken part-time during my ordination training and curacy, being finished after my appointment as Lazenby Chaplain to the University of Exeter. It has affected all my relationships and everyone I know ought to be thanked. I am grateful for the assistance of staff members and library facilities of St John's College, Nottingham, the Universities of Oxford, Nottingham and Exeter, King's College, London, St George's College, Jerusalem and Bromley Reference Library. Computing assistance was given by Lou Barnard of the Oxford University Computing Service Text Archive and by Project Pallas, University of Exeter. The support and encouragement of the Rt Revd David Say, Lord Bishop of Rochester, the Revd Canon Michael Beek, my vicar at Bromley Parish Church and the Vice-Chancellor and Lazenby Trust of Exeter University have been vital in ensuring the completion of this work. I wish to thank the Advisory Council for the Church's Ministry, the Dioceses of Rochester and Exeter, the Universities of Nottingham and Exeter, and the Bishop Henry Phillpotts Trust for financial assistance.

Papers about my research were given to the following: the University of Nottingham Theology Department Staff and Postgraduate Seminar, 27 November 1984; the 'Creating Theologians' Conference, St John's College, Nottingham, 19 July 1985; the British New Testament Conference, King's College, London, 20 September 1986; Rochester Diocese Clergy Study Day, 24 March 1987; the University of Exeter Classics Department Staff Research Seminar, 13 May 1988; Tavistock Deanery Chapter, 10 November 1988; the Hooker Group, Exeter, 16 March 1989; Christianity Deanery Chapter, 6 June 1990. I am grateful to all who participated for their comments and questions. In particular, I would like to thank those who have read parts of this study for their helpful comments: Dr Maurice Casey, my supervisor; Dr Stephen Travis and Dr Andrew Lincoln of St John's College for their encouragement, particularly in the initial years, and Professor David Catchpole of the University of Exeter for his support more recently; and Dr Joseph Geiger of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem for his encouragement during my stay there in summer 1986. Particular mention must be made of Dr Christopher Pelling of University College, Oxford who tutored me through my first degree in Literae Humaniores and who has been very helpful with the classical side of this thesis. The thesis was examined by Professor Graham Stanton and Dr John Muddiman on 1 November 1989, and I am especially grateful to Professor David Aune of St Xavier College, Chicago for his written comments recommending it for the SNTS Monograph Series; Professor Stanton has been both patient and helpful during the revision.

Finally, my family have suffered the side-effects of postgraduate study. I am grateful to my parents and my mother-in-law for all their love, and to my daughters, Rebecca Siân and Sarah Bethan, who may have delayed the work by being born during its much longer gestation but who have so greatly enriched my life. I owe a debt greater than I can say to my wife, Sue, for all that she has done and has been throughout this entire period, and I dedicate this work to her in thanks on our Wedding Anniversary, 1 September 1990.
